

DETECTIVE OCCULT SOCIETY (DOS)

By: Isabelle Songco

Pancho, a high school kid, is nervous on his first day transferring to a new school in the city. He wants to make a good impression with his classmates. Despite his kind and gentle personality, due to the spike of his puberty hormones, he now has the appearance of an intimidating delinquent.

To his surprise, he is sitting beside Agatha, an anti-social girl who he encountered during the summer who mistook him for a thief but has proven otherwise.

Every day, the two struggled to get along with their classmates and ended up being lunch mates - Agatha was shouting on the rooftop (frustrated at the life of a high schooler needing to fit in). When Pancho saw her, he shouted his sentiments as well. To lighten up the situation, he suggested that they might just be hungry thus being angry and offered to share his baon. They shared Pancho's meal together.

One day after school, Agatha goes to the 24-hour city library to hang out. Pancho tags along as he wants to tour the city as well. While in the library, they cause a ruckus when they "voice over" stories of people staying at the library making fun of them.

An old woman approached them saying "Can't you be quieter! We are in a library. Sheesh! Don't put your school name to shame!". Agatha was taken aback and just said "Sorry ma'am...errr.." and looked at her tag "....Ma'am Josie". The old woman walked away and murmured "Tsk.... Kids these days.."

The next day, the two find themselves in an odd situation.

A girl from their classroom lost her black ball pen. When the professor arrived and required them to take out their ball pens for an essay type exam - all the girls suddenly found out they lost their pens.

The boys wanting to help and lend their extra pens find out they only have enough for themselves. In the end, the girls had a demerit for non-compliance for their requirements.

Pancho finished ahead of time, lent his ball pen to Agatha, saving her from getting a zero on the exam.

As a result, the girls seek to find out who has been stealing their pens. Their prime suspect is Pancho, who was already marked as the most notorious guy in school. Coincidentally, all this started to happen when he arrived at school.

A few days passed, and the reports have increased. Not only ball pens were missing, but writing items including pencils, writing pads, and even the pens from the school bookstore. The school sought an internal investigation checking their bags, and lockers with the help of the teachers and the CAT of the school

When they approached Pancho's locker, they found most of the missing items. Agatha being an acquaintance of Pancho was associated as an accomplice. Both were called to the Principal's office. They plead not guilty, but due to the strong evidence, they have violated the rules of the school Pancho might be expelled and Agatha might be suspended and be put in school probation. They are scheduled to have a meeting in 2 days with their parents regarding the matter.

As they approached their classroom, all eyes were on them. The day went slow. They felt humiliated and ashamed. Agatha, knowing the true nature of Pancho, seeks to clear their name.

Together they proceeded with their investigation.

They interviewed some classmates who are willing to help but most are hostile towards them.

They observed their surroundings as to who has a secret motive to frame Pancho.

Feeling exhausted. They hang out on the rooftop. A classmate came forward and told them that when she started missing her pens. She noticed at first that the black pens were the only ones being stolen. When she tried to switch the black ballpen and her red ballpen's container - the black ballpen with the red container was the one stolen. Soon after that, any items belonging to the girls related to writing went missing. Something supernatural must be going on.

Pancho and Agatha went to the security to check the CCTV footage. But somehow the footage from the locker area is missing.

They then sought to find out the locker owners as someone beside Pancho might have seen his locker code.

They then noticed that the locker beside him has an old lock. The locker has no "current" owner. Seems like the locker has always been skipped. They opened the locker and found out a letter that was hidden in the creases of the locker metal.

When they opened the letter, it was a love confession addressed to a person named Alfonso from a woman named Josefina. Realizing it was Josie the librarian. They sought after her and found out that Alfonso was a young boy who died 30 years ago. Josefina was not sure if he ever read her letter as they never met up. He stopped coming to school one day. And she was not able to hear from him until the news that he died.

Pancho and Agatha hurriedly went back to school at midnight as they had a few hours left before the verdict of their case. They called out Alfonso. He came out and admitted that he was the one stealing the girls' items as his own act of selfish revenge. He was heartbroken, as the person he loved stood him up and never wrote back. He framed Pancho as he was reminded of the school bully who wasn't nice to him and had the affection of Josefina.

He throws the school chairs at Pancho, crushing him at the end of the hallway. Alfonso being more hostile towards women was about to kill Agatha when Josefina showed up. He finds out that Josefina loved him all along and was really sad when her first love died suddenly. She wrote back that she can't make it on that day after school and wanted to meet at the library instead. They never met up. Alfonso saw that she was leaving the school with the school bully but actually was just conversing with him as his tutor. When Josefina wanted to ask Alfonso what happened, he stopped coming to school thinking that he was rejected.

In a brief moment, Josefina turns into her younger self and kisses Alfonso. He then disappears smiling. As they were able to appease his soul, they lit up a candle and say a prayer.

The next day during the meeting, Agatha and Pancho tried to defend themselves showing the CCTV footage of the locations during those days. But they lack the footage of the locker area. The evidence of the missing items being found in his locker is too strong plus their motive of being ostracised and getting back at their classmates. As the decision was about to be handed out. Suddenly someone barged in. Josefina was part of the board of directors of the school. Turns out that she just volunteers at the city library just to kill time, and because she loved her time in school, reading books, and seeing different kinds of stories of people developing in the library.

Despite clearing their name, they can't seem to remove the prejudice of their classmates immediately.

However, they found some following with some students who want to seek their help with their personal and supernatural problems, thus establishing their secret club: Detective Occult Society.
